They are valuable treasure of a civilized nation and thus need constant care and maintenance from the time of their creation to their final retirement to an Archival Institution for scientific preservation. In preserving the documentary heritage of a nation, the Archival institutions fulfill the objectives, namely, digitization, organization and service to the public of documents either public or private in nature.

The professional Archivists engaged in an archival institution are expected to implement this objective in a responsible manner in accordance with the rules and objectives and techniques of the archival profession. The creators and users of archives should lend the Archivists all help possible for enabling them to carry out their primary functions efficiently.

Keeping records in modern times date from the East India Company's administration. Gradually as the years rolled on, the accumulation of records provided the foundations on which government relied for its activities. The French Revolution of 1789 marked the beginning of a new era in records management and archives administration. The principle of accessibility of archives to the public owes its contribution to the Revolution itself.

But in India the setting up of a Central Muniment room known as Civil Secretariat Record Room was the outcome of the recommendations of the Record Commission of 1861 which was headed by Mr. Seton Karr. But the idea of a Central Records Room was abandoned in 1865 in place of separate record room attached to certain departments of the Government of India and Government of Bengal to be styled as permanent offices of Records. Later on the question of better preservation of old historical records in the Secretariat & Mofassil offices was taken up in 1902 by Mr. Hill, the Record Officer of the Government of India. In 1915 after the separation from Bengal the State Government received a memorandum from the Government of India which was prepared by Mr. William Foster.

In 1917 the adoption of the Destruction of Records Act gave it a statutory basis. The urgency of the matter was brought to the notice of the Bihar Government by the Indian Historical Records Commission which was set up in 1919 and more so in 1930 when it held its session in Patna. The Commission recommended to the Government of Bihar and Orissa to establish a Provincial Record Office, at which the records surviving in the districts and divisions would be concentrated, and to place this office in charge of a competent Record Keeper, with facilities for study by genuine students subject to the conditions that usually obtain in other Record Offices.

Odisha State Archives (OSA) is the Central repository meant for housing the non-current records of enduring value for administrative use as well as for historical research. The origin of the State Archives as an independent institution goes back to the year 1960. A separate building was constructed and made available to the State Archives in the year 1971. This building has a large stack area in five floors each measuring 100' X 50' and is insulated from the administrative block. It consists of spacious halls used as Library and research room, committee room and for housing photo Duplication Unit and Repair and Rehabilitation Unit. Besides, there is a room for reception of records. The head of the State Archives is designated as the Superintendent of Archives and entrusted with the following duties and responsibilities:

1. He is the Inspecting Officer of all public records and records of semi- public institutions like the municipalities and Zilla Parishads, etc, “vide Government Resolution No. 1756-CA., dated the 6th March 1978” (See Appendix II).
2. He is responsible for the custody, proper care and management of all records received in the State Archives of Odisha.
3. He is required to co-ordinate and guide all operations connected with the public records in respect of the administration, preservation and elimination with a view to ensuring that records of permanent value are not destroyed and are transferred to the State Archives at the appropriate time.
4. He is required to render such advice and assistance as may be possible to the officers and institutions in respect of technical problems bearing on record management.
5. He is responsible for attending to ancillary matters such as archival commissions and committees, archival publications, organizing exhibitions and for development of general archival consciousness in the State.
6. He is required to submit a report to Government every year on the management of public records with particular reference to actual working of the record management system.
7. Archival Policy of the State Government has appropriately defined the role of Records managers of the State Government and a Resolution to that effect has been issued with the approval of the with the approval of the cabinet. (See Appendix III).

The main functions of the State Archives are the collection, the preservation and the management of records. These functions are performed to serve the creators or records as well as to serve the bona fide users of records.

Archives contain the original and basic information in many important fields of study in humanities and social sciences. Though Archives are nothing more than mere instruments of administration and they are preserved primarily to enable the administrative bodies which created them to function efficiently, as time passes, archives come to acquire values other than purely administrative values – values for historians, economists, sociologists and genealogists; in short, for any enquirer into his country's past. The special value of archives to research has been realized from the gray down of written history, i.e. from the very moment when archives keeping was started. But it is from the latter half of the 19th century, that the archives have been used as source materials for history.

Holdings Records

The records preserved in the Odisha State Archives (OSA) show the rich wealth of historical material- political, administrative, economic and social. These materials are the outcome of administrative activities of the State Government which have accumulated in course of years. They are virtually the administrative memory of the state preserved in its entirety, in undisturbed continuity and unalloyed integrity.

Odisha State Archives (OSA) holds a valuable collection of documents especially from colonial period. Secretariat Records of the Government of Odisha, Records of Government of Bengal for the Pre 1912 period and considerable amount of Divisional and District Records are significant holdings of Odisha State Archives (OSA).

Track the progress, effectiveness, and impact of the project, ensuring that it meets its objectives and delivers the desired outcomes. Here are some key aspects to consider when developing digitization project.

Scope and Objectives: Clearly define the scope of the digitization project, including the specific processes, systems, or documents that will be digitized. Outline the objectives of the project, such as improving efficiency, enhancing accessibility, reducing costs, or streamlining workflows.

Project Methodology: Describe the approach and methodology that will be followed for the digitization work. This may include details on data collection, analysis, software or hardware requirements, project management methodologies, and quality assurance processes.

- Outline the proposed methodology for digitization, including the steps involved in the process.
- Discuss the selection criteria for prioritizing documents for digitization, if applicable.
- Describe the digitization techniques and equipment to be used, ensuring compliance with archival preservation standards.
- Explain the quality control measures to ensure accurate digitization and metadata capture.

Project Timeline: Develop a detailed project timeline, including major milestones, key activities, and estimated timeframes for each phase of the digitization project. This will help in tracking progress and ensuring timely completion of the work.

Electronics Documents & Record Management System (EDRMS): Records Management system (RMS) is the management of records for an organization throughout the records-life cycle.

Activities involved in records management are:

- Appraisal and quantify the records
- Identifying the information which needs to be captured.
- Information planning for the organization.
- Enforcement of policies and practices regarding creation, maintenance, disposal of records
- Creation of a records storage plan.
- Classification, identification and storing the records.
- Coordination of providing internal and external access to the records keeping in view of data privacy and business and data confidentiality.

Resource Requirements: Identify the resources needed to execute the digitization project effectively. This may include personnel, equipment, software, infrastructure, or any other resources required for successful implementation.

Risk Assessment: Identify potential risks and challenges that may arise during the digitization process. Assess their impact and likelihood and propose mitigation strategies to minimize their negative effects on the project.

Cost Estimation: Provide a comprehensive cost estimate for the digitization project, including expenses related to personnel, hardware, software, training, infrastructure, and any other relevant costs.

Monitoring and Evaluation: Define the monitoring and evaluation mechanisms that will be put in place to track the progress and success of the digitization project.

Implementation Plan: Outline a detailed plan for implementing the digitization project, including coordination mechanisms, communication channels, change management strategies, and any other activities required for successful implementation.

Technical Infrastructure: Detail the necessary technical infrastructure required to support the digitization project, including hardware, software, and storage solutions. Discuss any required upgrades or investments in technology to ensure efficient and effective digitization processes.

Relevant Policies and Guidelines: Include any relevant policies, guidelines, or standards that apply to the digitization project. This may include records management policies, archival preservation guidelines, or compliance regulations that need to be adhered to during the digitization process.

Digitization Equipment: Specify the type and specifications of digitization equipment required, such as scanners, cameras, or specialized preservation equipment. Consider factors such as resolution, color accuracy, speed, document size compatibility, and compatibility with existing systems or workflows.

Software and Tools: Identify the software and tools necessary for digitization, metadata management, and quality control. Include details about the software's capabilities, compatibility with file formats, and features such as image enhancement, OCR (Optical Character Recognition), or metadata extraction.

Data Storage and Management: Define the requirements for data storage and management systems to store digitized files securely. Consider factors such as storage capacity, redundancy, backup and recovery procedures, data integrity, and access control to ensure the long-term preservation of digital assets.

Metadata Standards: Specify the metadata standards and schemas to be used for describing and organizing digitized materials. Outline the required metadata elements, such as title, creator, date, description, and keywords, to ensure efficient search and retrieval of digitized materials.

Workflow Design: Develop a workflow that outlines the sequential steps involved in the digitization process, from document preparation to quality control and storage. Define roles and responsibilities for each step, considering the coordination among digitization technicians, metadata specialists, and quality control personnel.

Quality Control Measures: Establish quality control procedures to ensure the accuracy and integrity of digitized materials. Specify quality control checks, such as resolution verification, color accuracy, completeness of metadata, and visual inspection for artifacts or damage.

Integration with Existing Systems: Assess the integration requirements with existing systems, such as archival management systems or digital repositories. Consider data exchange formats, APIs (Application Programming Interfaces), or integration mechanisms to ensure smooth interoperability and data synchronization.

User Access and Interface: Define the requirements for user access and interface, considering factors such as user authentication, access levels, and user-friendly navigation. Address accessibility considerations to ensure compliance with accessibility standards and guidelines.

Security and Data Privacy: Address security measures to protect digitized materials, including encryption, access controls, and data privacy considerations. Comply with relevant regulations and best practices to ensure the security and confidentiality of sensitive information.

SOFTWARE REQUIREMENT:

Document Management System (DMS): A DMS facilitates the organization, storage, and retrieval of digitized documents. Look for a DMS that offers features such as document indexing, search capabilities, version control, and access controls to ensure efficient management of digitized materials.

Image Capture and Editing Software: Select software that supports high-quality image capture and editing functionalities. This software should be compatible with the digitization equipment being used and offer features for adjusting image resolution, brightness, contrast, cropping, and image enhancement to ensure optimal digitization results.

Optical Character Recognition (OCR) Software: OCR software enables the conversion of scanned images into searchable and editable text. Choose OCR software that provides accurate recognition capabilities, supports multiple languages, and offers features such as bulk processing and the ability to handle complex document layouts.

Metadata Management System: A metadata management system allows for the creation, storage, and retrieval of metadata associated with digitized materials. Look for a system that supports the creation of metadata templates, standardizes metadata elements, and facilitates efficient metadata entry and search functionalities.

Preservation and Archival Software: If long-term preservation of digitized materials is a requirement, consider using preservation and archival software. This software should support the creation of preservation metadata, ensure file integrity through checksums, and provide tools for migration, format conversion, and adherence to archival standards.

Search and Discovery Interface: Choose a software solution that provides a user-friendly interface for searching and discovering digitized materials. Look for features such as advanced search capabilities, filters, faceted browsing, thumbnail previews, and the ability to view document details or download digitized files.

Access Control and Security: Ensure that the software solution offers robust access control mechanisms to protect sensitive or restricted materials. Features such as user authentication, role-based access control, and encryption should be considered to safeguard the digitized content.

Integration Capabilities: Consider software solutions that can integrate with existing systems or platforms within the organization. This includes integration with archival management systems, digital repositories, or other information management systems to ensure seamless interoperability and data exchange.

REQUEST FOR PROPOSAL

Scalability and Flexibility: Choose software that can scale with the growing needs of the digitization project. Consider its ability to handle large volumes of digitized materials, accommodate future expansion, and adapt to evolving technologies and standards.

Vendor Support and Training: Evaluate the vendor's support offerings, including technical support, software updates, and user training resources. Ensure that adequate training and documentation are available to assist users in effectively utilizing the software.

APPENDICES: Include any supporting documents, such as sample digitized documents, equipment specifications, organizational charts, or relevant policies and guidelines.

Training Materials: If training is required for project team members or end-users, provide sample training materials or outlines. This can include training modules, presentations, or user manuals that outline the procedures and best practices for working with digitized materials.

Vendor or Software Documentation: If third-party vendors or specialized software will be utilized in the digitization project, include documentation or brochures that provide details about the vendors or software products being considered. This can help stakeholders understand the capabilities and features of the proposed solutions.
